The Next Generation of Global Citizens by Michael E. Pippenger

Vice president
Associate provost for internationalization
University of Notre Dame

Michael Pippenger is vice president and associate provost for internationalization at Notre Dame since 2016. He is in charged with advising University leadership on global strategies and overseeing Notre Dame International, which broadens Notre Dame's international culture, programmes and reputation through study abroad, expanded international research, international collaborative projects, and strategic relationships with global partners. Before joining Notre Dame, Pippenger was dean of undergraduate global programmes at Columbia University in New York. As dean of undergraduate global programmes, Pippenger merged and restructured two offices from different university divisions to create a centralized office for undergraduate global education. Concurrently serving as assistant vice president for international education, he led 22 study abroad programmes worldwide and collaborated closely with Columbia's eight Global Centers; other responsibilities included assisting Columbia faculty in securing internal and external funding for global research. Pippenger served at Columbia since 2006, previously holding the positions of associate dean of fellowship programmes and study abroad and associate dean of academic affairs in the university's Columbia College. Pippenger joined Columbia from New York University, where he had been director of scholarship programmes in the College of Arts and Science. In addition, he held positions as senior programme officer and world area manager for the Asia/Pacific Fulbright Programme at the Institute of International Education. A graduate of Carleton College, Pippenger holds a M.A. and a Ph.D. in English literature from Indiana University.
